The purposes of JSPS-NWO joint, bilateral seminar Media, Migration and the Rise of Nationalism

Utrecht University

Assistant Professor

Koen Leurs

(Minor amendment by Tomohisa Hirata)

1) The bilateral seminar seeks to move beyond the Euro-American focus in the study of media and migration studies. The predominant scholarly in studies on migration and nationalism focus on experiences and perspectives in the North-American and European Context. How can we re-conceptualize our understanding of the role of media in migration and nationalism drawing from situated contexts in Japan, and countries like China, Vietnam, Laos, Myanmar and the Philippines in the context of East and South-East Asia?

2) The seminar seeks to explore what Japan (East Asia) and Southeast Asia can learn from the partly overlapping and partly diverging context of migration and the rise of nationalism in the Netherlands and Europe, and vice versa. The focus is on the contradictory role technologies play in migration management, control, integration and community formation, transnational communication but also conflict and extremism. The seminar is highly interdisciplinary, invited speakers come from disciplines including media, communication, gender, migration, geography, sociology and anthropology. The organizers seek to disseminate findings by publishing an open access journal special issue in Comparative Migration Studies, by offering policy recommendations as well as by distributing artistic impressions of main debates and findings.

3). The seminar is designed to exchange scholarship but a strong training component is central to our aims. For this purpose, one day of masterclasses is dedicated to training a selection of 3 talented students (MA/PhD level) from Japan (and 3 students from the Netherlands). Furthermore, alongside inviting a core group of established senior scholars, we are balancing the program to ensure the participation of young emerging scholars.
